Dr. John Ball leads us through an examination of how injuries and fatalities in the tree care industry happen, and how tree workers can protect themselves.

This workshop covers critical and life-saving information about topics vital to tree workers' safety –making ANSI Z133-2012 accessible; looking into common work situations that you should never take for granted, and sharing over 20 years of lessons about aerial work, aerial rescue and emergency response.

Dr. Ball is a Professor of Forestry and researcher at South Dakota State University examining tree worker performance and safety, and other arboriculture topics. His course offerings include arboriculture, rock climbing, and emergency medical response, and he serves as the campus arborist. Prior to SDSU he managed tree care companies in the East and Midwest.
